The Presbyterian College Report

December, 1986

These trustee officers will lead the board and Presbyterian College through a full program of activities during 1987. They are, seated: newly elected secretary Mrs. Betty P. Stall, Greenville church and civic leader; and Dr. W. Frank Harrington, senior minister of Atlanta's Peachtree Presbyterian Church, reelected chairman. Standing: Wilson C. Wearn of Greenville, board chairman of Multimedia, Inc., reelected trustee vice chairman; and President Orr.

Memo from President Orr:

Secret of success is constancy to purpose

During the past few years a host of national reports concerning needed reforms in education have been issued. You may have noticed news stories in November about the latest report, one prepared by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. Entitled "College: The Undergraduate Experience in America," the Carnegie report summarizes the findings of researchers who visited selected colleges and universities. Though they did not visit Presbyterian, they did spend two weeks on each of 29 campuses talking with students, faculty and administrators.

While admitting that the American system of higher education is the envy of the world due to its openness, diversity and scholarly achievement, they believe it now needs a new sense of direction and wholeness. "Undergraduate institutions," the Carnegie report says, "are driven by careerism and overshadowed by graduate and professional education; the undergraduate college—the very heart of higher learning—is a troubled institution."

The Carnegie report provides an extensive list of recommendations that will, they believe, improve the undergraduate experience. These include a more integrated core curriculum that introduces students to essential knowledge; an "enriched major" that requires students to explore a field in depth and culminates in a senior thesis; more emphasis on teaching freshmen and sophomores with the ablest faculty; and a broadened use of learning resources incorporating the new technology now available. Other suggestions commend lively all-college convocations, better living arrangements that promote a community of learning, a greater concern for the assessment of student progress, and the encouragement of students to participate in a community service project.

The Carnegie report concludes: "This nation and the world need well-informed, inquisitive, open minded young people who are both productive and reflective, seeking answers to life's most important questions. Above all, we need educated men and women who not only pursue their own personal interests but also are prepared to fulfill their social and civic obligations. And it is during the undergraduate experience, perhaps more than at any other time, that these essential qualities of mind and character are refined."

We at Presbyterian College believe the need for educational reform is ever present due to the dynamic forces that change the world in which we live. And we believe, as the British statesman, Benjamin Disraeli, once said: "The secret of success is constancy to purpose." We have just completed an extensive two-year self-study of Presbyterian College life and program. Recommendations from this study are being implemented through several faculty committees and through a new six-year long range plan for the college, covering the years 1987 to 1992.

Our continuing commitment is to offer our students a quality four-year educational experience that well prepares them for the opportunities and challenges of the future. Unlike some of the colleges visited by the Carnegie researchers, Presbyterian College is not "a troubled institution." We are, instead, a college with a clear sense of our purpose and mission and a determination to achieve excellence in education.

Woodruff's $500,000 gift toward new fine arts center

Retired Coca-Cola director adds early support to plans for a $4 million theater and visual arts center at PC that will serve as a regional hub for artistic expression.

Retired Coca-Cola director George W. Woodruff of Atlanta has given $500,000 to Presbyterian College to assist in the erection of a new theater and visual arts center.

"I like Presbyterian College and am pleased to add this gift as an investment in its promising future," Mr. Woodruff said in making his own personal contribution to the school affiliated with the Presbyterian Church (USA) of Georgia and South Carolina. More than one-fourth of PC's 1,043 students come from the Atlanta area.

President Kenneth B. Orr said the new facility is projected to cost $4 million. Architectural plans call for a design that incorporates a flexible dramatic theater, art gallery and exhibition space, art studios, a media center, and classrooms for the visual and performing arts. The building will be situated on the east plaza of the 175-acre campus adjacent to the campus lake. Dr. Orr added:

"We are very grateful to Mr. Woodruff for his generous gift and for his interest in Presbyterian College. The new center for theater and visual arts will be one of our most exciting facilities. Its appealing architectural design will provide strong aesthetic support for the arts. Its active program—including a wide range of plays, art shows, continuing education courses and special events—will enrich our students, our campus and our community. I envision the new center as a regional hub for artistic expression. It will serve the needs of thousands of area residents as well as the more than one thousand students at PC."

Dr. W. Frank Harrington, senior minister of Atlanta's Peachtree Presbyterian Church and chairman of the Presbyterian College board of trustees, expressed his appreciation in these words:

"I have known Mr. George Woodruff and his late lady, Mrs. Irene Woodruff, since my days as a seminary student. To have him support Presbyterian College at this strategic time in his life means a great deal to me personally and will serve to strengthen the college in many places."

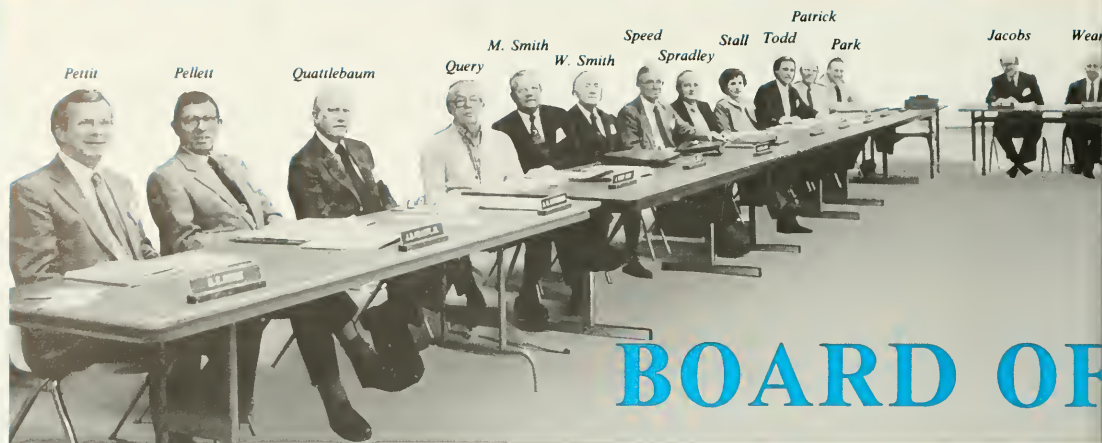

An Atlanta business and civic leader, George Woodruff was president and then board chairman of the Continental Gin Company until his retirement in 1959. In addition to being a member of the board of directors of The Coca-Cola Company, he has served on the board of the Trust Company of Georgia and a number of other companies. His public service includes a long record of devotion to higher education as a trustee and benefactor. His education was received at Georgia Tech and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and he is a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Atlanta.

George Woodruff's father, Ernest Woodruff, headed a group who purchased The Coca-Cola Company from the Candler family in 1919, and his late brother, Robert W. Woodruff, led the company for many years. The Emily and Ernest Woodruff Foundation, established by George Woodruff's parents in 1938, became noted for its philanthropic endeavors.

Beyond service as a foundation trustee, George Woodruff has maintained his own personal philanthropies in support of causes he deemed worthy. His wife, the former Irene King, shared this enthusiasm until her death in 1982.

Trustees Hold the Key

"I am convinced that a key to educational strength in the decade of the eighties is to be found in those colleges that have very strong boards of trustees. For that reason, we have worked hard to secure the services of a distinguished group of leaders who know the Presbyterian Church and endorse the aims of PC."

—President Kenneth B. Orr

"I think Presbyterian College has one of the strongest boards I've served on and any that I know about. The board members are interested in the college, supportive of the college, and are splendid in their attendance at board activities and meetings. Philosophically, we are all committed to the reality that Presbyterian College is in pursuit of excellence academically for the glory of God and for the support of the values that never age."

—Trustee Chairman W. Frank Harrington

These two statements underscore why Presbyterian College has made such remarkable progress in recent years—and why confidence abounds in the prospects for even greater progress in the years ahead.

There have been good boards in the past, and strong individual leaders. But historical perspective suggests the current body of trustees ranks at the top in terms of overall professional balance and sustained response to the program of this college.

It is also PC's largest board. The Synod of the Southeast five years ago approved expansion to 40 members with the addition of two more Synod-elected representatives and four more at-large members chosen by the board. This decision brought the board lineup to 28 Synod trustees (14 each from Georgia and South Carolina), 9 at-large members and 3 elected by the alumni. Because two of the at-large slots await filling, the present board total stands at 38 trustees. They come from these fields:

- 22 business executives
- 6 Presbyterian ministers
- 1 minister-educator
- 4 educators, college and public school
- 3 women church and civic leaders
- 2 attorneys

These individuals are widely recognized as successful

Brief Profile of Board Members

Ronald W. Allen of Atlanta, president and chief operating officer of Delta Air Lines. He has been president of Delta since 1983 after more than 20 years of executive service with this leader of the airline industry. Ron Allen went to Georgia Tech to earn his industrial engineering degree and joined the Delta organization immediately after graduation.

Active in the business and civic life of Atlanta, he is an advisory director of Citizens & Southern National Bank, a director of the United Way of Metropolitan Atlanta and an elder of the Peachtree Presbyterian Church. He is concluding his first year as a trustee at Presbyterian College.

William A. Barnette, Jr., of Greenwood, S. C., president of Greenwood Packing Plant, a leading meat processing firm whose Carolina Pride and Greenwood Farms labels extend over a wide area. He is now in his 15th year as a trustee—having rotated off the board in 1977 after a nine-year tenure and received reappointment in 1981 for additional service.

A Clemson University graduate, Bill Barnette has served as a director of the American Meat Institute and vice chairman of the Greenwood Planning Commission. He is an elder of Greenwood's First Presbyterian Church.

Irwin Belk of Charlotte, N. C., an officer and director of the Belk Group of Stores. He joined the board as an at-large member in 1976. Active in professional and community affairs, Irwin Belk has served on numerous civic, educational and corporate boards.

He also is a past member of the N. C. House of Representatives (1959-62) and the state Senate (1963-66)... a former elder of Charlotte's Myers Park Presbyterian Church and past president of the N. C. Synod

Men's Council. He holds the BS degree from the University of North Carolina and has two honorary degrees from other institutions.

Joe W. B. Brooks of Clinton, senior minister of the First Presbyterian Church. When Ross Templeton resigned for health reasons in mid-1986, Joe Brooks returned as replacement to the board on which he had served earlier (1973-82).

He brings the experience of his ministerial service that includes the past five years at the First Church after 12 years in the pulpit of Rock Hill's Oakland Avenue Church and nine years at Spartanburg's Westminster Church. He holds the BA degree from the University of West Virginia, BD from Union Seminary in Virginia and DMin from McCormick Seminary. Daughter Marty is a 1981 PC graduate.

Bennett A. Brown of Atlanta, chairman and chief executive officer of the Citizens & Southern Corporation and a 1950 graduate of Presbyterian College. With the C&S National Bank organization for 31 years, he became assistant president in 1971 enroute to being named president and chief executive officer seven years later.

Bennett Brown has given special service to his Peachtree Presbyterian Church as an elder and to the field of education as a trustee and advisor to several institutions. He also is Atlanta Chamber of Commerce president. PC cited him in 1976 with the Alumni Gold P Award for distinguished professional achievement. In completing nine continuous years as trustee in 1986, he automatically rotates off the board.

Lynn W. Cooper, Jr., of Clinton, owner of two automobile agencies, Lynn Cooper, Inc. (Oldsmobile and Dodge) and Clinton Ford-Mercury. A member of PC's 1956 class, he was president of the Alumni Association in 1979 prior to his 1983 election as an alumni representative to the board. He also has been active in other areas of the college program.

Lynn Cooper's numerous civic activities include leadership in both local and county Chamber of Commerce work, the YMCA, Clinton Housing Authority and service as a past deacon of the First Baptist Church.

Paul T. Eckel of Atlanta, senior minister of the First Presbyterian Church. He has served this congregation since 1977 after three years at the Eastminster Presbyterian Church of Columbia, S.C. Earlier pastorates were in Springfield and Buchanan, Va. Paul Eckel has been a leader in presbytery and synod—with committees on Christian education, church extension, national ministries and the commission on the minister—and he was moderator of Potomac Presbytery.

He went to the University of Maryland for his BA degree and Princeton Seminary for his BD, then to San Francisco Seminary for his DMin. He joined the board in 1979.

James E. Fogartie of Spartanburg, S. C., senior minister of the First Presbyterian Church. A third-generation Presbyterian minister, he has served his present pastorate since 1974. He came from 19 years with Charlotte's Myers Park Church after serving Arkansas churches in Marianna and Fort Smith. Jim Fogartie has been elected moderator of North Carolina Synod and three presbyteries.

He holds BA and MA degrees from the University of Texas, a BD from Austin Seminary, ThM from Union Seminary in Virginia and honorary degree from Austin College. A trustee for nine years, he now rotates off.

Mrs. Louise (James G.) Gallant of LaGrange, Ga., is a church and civic leader who has been active in the program of LaGrange's First Presbyterian Church and in community youth work. Her earlier experience as a registered nurse included being a nursing instructor and director of nursing service.

She and her late husband (Jimmy Gallant) served on the PC board of visitors, and he also was a trustee at the time of his death in 1975. Louise Gallant began her trustee service in 1979.

William W. Gaston of Atlanta, chief executive officer and chairman of the executive committee of Gold Kist Inc., leading non-profit farmers cooperative of this area. With the firm and its earlier organization since 1950, he rose to his present position in 1972 and is a recognized leader in his field.

Bill Gaston serves on the boards of numerous professional agricultural groups, both in this country and in Europe... on education boards... and as an elder of Covenant Presbyterian Church. He attended PC before graduating from Clemson, and joined our board in 1980.

H. Caldwell Harper of Greenville, chairman of Harper Brothers, Inc., South Carolina's largest office supply company—where he began in 1927 as a 14-year-old "errand boy" working for his brother. Caldwell Harper is a past president of the National Office Products Association and former co-chairman of Greenville's downtown Total Development Committee.

A PC trustee since 1982, he also has served on the boards of many other educational and civic organizations and is actively involved with the First Presbyterian Church.

Robert R. Hill of Columbia, deputy superintendent for administration & planning with the South Carolina Department of Education. A 1958 graduate of PC, he began his public school career as a teacher-coach in Sumter... became a principal during five years at Barnwell High... then joined the education department in 1968.

A past president of the PC Alumni Association, Bob Hill received the 1980 Alumni Service Award and was elected a trustee in 1982. He also leads in many civic and church activities, is an elder of the Seven Oaks Presbyterian Church and holds an MEd degree from the University of Georgia. Daughter Laura is a PC senior.

Norris L. Hogans of Atlanta, principal of George Washington Carver Comprehensive High School. He was cited last year in an ATLANTA magazine cover story as one of "50 people who make Atlanta special... a powerhouse in upgrading inner city schooling."

Norris Hogans also exerts leadership in other areas of Atlanta life. He is an elder of the First Presbyterian Church, a board member of the United Way and Goodwill Industries and on the Private Industry Council of Atlanta. He earned his BA degree from Morris Brown College, then went to Atlanta University for both his MA and PhD degrees. A PC trustee since 1984.

James B. Holderman of Columbia, president of the University of South Carolina since 1977. He holds a wide array of distinguished honors, including 12 honorary degrees. Jim Holderman served the University of Illinois at Chicago Circle as vice chancellor... was executive director of the Illinois Board of Higher Education... then Lilly Endowment vice president and a senior vice president of the Academy for Educational Development, Inc., before going to Carolina.

A former professor of political science, he received his BA degree from Denison University and PhD from Northwestern University. He is an elder of Eastminster Presbyterian Church, now completing his first year as a PC trustee.

Mrs. Lillian B. (N. McFadden) Hollis of Dalton, Ga., church and civic leader. A former deacon of the First Presbyterian Church, she has been especially active in all phases of this congregation's work. Her leadership responsibilities have included superintendent of the church school, president of the Women of the Church, church hostess and chairman of the Christian education committee of Cherokee Presbytery.

Lillian Hollis also cultivates her fine arts interest as a director of the local Creative Arts Guild. A trustee since 1979.

Hugh S. Jacobs of Clinton, retired as vice president of Jacobs Press after more than 35 years as president and co-owner. A 1941 graduate of PC and great-grandson of its founder, he rotates off the board leaders in their own career fields, President Orr pointed out. They voluntarily provide the college a large reservoir of talent, wisdom and experience that far exceeds any expertise that we could afford to engage as paid consultants. He added:

"PC administrators have an opportunity to draw on this 'talent bank' as we need counsel and leadership. Whenever I can, I seek the insight and judgment of our trustees to help me administer the college. They are busy people, but I am glad to say that I have never yet had a trustee decline to accept a special task or responsibility. I believe this is because these persons see assistance to our college as a form of their Christian service and therefore assign it a high priority."

Trustees are chosen to serve three-year terms and may be reelected for two additional terms—a maximum of nine consecutive years before automatically rotating off the board. (The exceptions are alumni-elected members, limited to two consecutive terms by Alumni Association bylaws.)

Some trustees do return for additional tenures after rotation. And alumni often serve in Synod and at-large positions, not being limited to election as alumni representatives. For example, 11 of the current board members are PC graduates.

These provisions ensure continuity and stability on the board, while at the same time allowing for new leaders to be brought in on a regular basis. As a case in point, four new trustees begin service in 1987 as replacements for the four who rotate off.

Dr. W. Frank Harrington, senior minister of Atlanta's Peachtree Presbyterian Church, has served as chairman of the board of trustees since 1983. As a tribute to his effective leadership, he recently was elected by his colleagues to continue in office during 1987. Harrington is a 1957 Presbyterian College graduate now about to begin his tenth year as a trustee of his alma mater.

Also remaining in office for his fifth year as vice chairman is Wilson C. Wearn of Greenville, board chairman of Multimedia, Inc. An enthusiastic trustee since coming on the PC board in 1981, he expressed his sentiments in these words:

"With the tremendous progress now being made in the entire Presbyterian College program, it's an exciting time to be a board member."

Hugh Jacobs of Clinton, another PC alumnus who recently retired as vice president of Jacobs Press, is the present board secretary but will end his long tenure in this position when he rotates off the governing body at the close of 1986.

His successor as board secretary is Mrs. Betty Peace (Edward H.) Stall of Greenville, church and civic leader, who joined the trustee organization last year. She is one of three women now on the PC board—which has benefitted

Robert M. Vance of Clinton (with shovel above, left, with past presidents Marc Weersing and Marshall Brown and trustee Leonard Bruce at a 1964 ground-breaking) is the present board's longest-tenured trustee who has taken part in more PC building programs than any other chairman. His 34 years of trustee service since 1952 and his 16 years as board chairman (1956-67 and 1978-82) both rank second among all of the more than 375 trustees who have served this college since 1880. Only founder William P. Jacobs had a longer chairmanship.

Robert Vance is board chairman of M. S. Bailey & Son, Bankers, and of Clinton Mills, Inc. He served as bank president from 1948 to 1975 and as the mill president, 1958-79. Professional colleagues elected him president of the S. C. Bankers Association and of the S. C. Textile Association, and he was named 1978 "Textile Man of the Year" by the New York Board of Trade. He also has been chairman of the S. C. Commission on Higher Education, a trustee of the Institute of Textile Technology and state Chamber of Commerce director. A graduate of Davidson College, he holds an honorary doctor of humanities degree from PC and is an elder of the First Presbyterian Church.

from feminine advice and counsel since the first two women were appointed in 1968.

(Those first "pioneers," incidentally, were Mrs. Dorothy C. Fuqua of Atlanta and Dr. Virginia S. Hardie of Clemson, S. C.)

Mrs. Stall recently expressed this view as she neared completion of her second year of trustee stewardship.

"When I became a member of the Presbyterian College board of trustees, my first impression was of the commitment of its members. Those busy people come to Clinton from all over South Carolina and Georgia for two-day meetings and participate in the deliberations with enthusiasm for the college and wisdom from their own experience. I am further impressed with the stature and knowledge of the board members. They are interesting, able people with major business responsibilities and influence, who care about the college: its students . . . its faculty and staff . . . its alumni . . . its Christian foundation . . . and its social responsibility. It is indeed a privilege to be part of this group and to help PC build on its great strengths."

What is the board's authority as the governing body of this college? Section 3 of the Charter puts it this way:

The Board of Trustees of Presbyterian College shall be vested with the control, management and government of the College for the purpose of promoting Christian Education this year upon concluding 18 years of service that first began in 1964. Hugh Jacobs presently is chairman of the Laurens County Council and has been a community leader for years.

An elder of the First Presbyterian Church, he is a past moderator of the Synod of South Carolina. He also is a former president of the PC Alumni Association and recipient of its 1955 Alumni Service Award. Daughter Edna also holds the PC degree.

Nathaniel R. Johnson of Atlanta retired last year as vice president for corporate human resources with the BellSouth Corporation. Prior to that responsibility, he had been the vice president for personnel with Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company since 1969. Nat Johnson joined Southern Bell in 1959 as security director after being an FBI special agent.

His civic activities have included chairing the Atlanta United Negro Fund, the Health Care Task Force and the Southern Industrial Relations Conference. A graduate of Ursinus College (Pa.) and elder of Northwest Presbyterian Church, he became a trustee in 1981.

John A. Kuhne of Greenville, S. C., president of the Belk Simpson Stores in that area. He has been an executive with the 31-store group since earning his BS degree from PC in 1966. Jack Kuhne became president of the organization in 1983 after several years in his supervisory capacity as vice president.

He served on the alumni board of directors here and on the board of visitors prior to becoming a trustee three years ago. He also is actively involved in his community and the First Presbyterian Church. Son John, Jr., is currently enrolled as a freshman here.

Clarence A. McArthur, Jr., of Rock Hill, S. C., chairman of Standard Life & Casualty Insurance Company. He served this company as president for a number of years prior to assuming his position. A past chairman of the South Carolina Life and Health Guaranty Association and former president of S. C. Life Insurance Companies, he also serves on numerous local boards.

"Mac" McArthur is an elder of the Oakland Avenue Presbyterian Church and a graduate of Davidson College. In addition to being on the PC board since 1982, he has sent three of his four sons—Sandy, Jimmy and Leigh—to PC.

James P. McLain of Atlanta, partner in the law firm of McLain & Merritt. His professional activity includes having been president of both the Lawyers Club of Atlanta and the Atlanta Estate Planning Council as well as past trustee chairman of the Atlanta Lawyers Foundation, Inc.

He has shown special interest in higher education as a trustee of three institutions in addition to PC board service since 1978. Jim McLain also is an elder of Peachtree Presbyterian Church. Holder of both BS and law degrees from the University of Georgia, he sent son Rod to Presbyterian College.

Ellison S. McKissick of Greenville, S. C., president of Alice Manufacturing Company. The immediate past president of the American Textile Manufacturers Institute, his professional involvement also has included being president of the S. C. Textile Manufacturers Association and a trustee of the Institute of Textile Technology as well as the director of numerous corporations.

Ellison McKissick also has been a leader in civic affairs, in youth work and an officer of his Episcopal church. A member of PC's Class of 1950, he received the 1980 Alumni Gold P Award for distinguished accomplishments and has 13 years of trustee service.

William J. Park of Greenwood, S. C., chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Park Seed Company, the nation's largest family owned mail-order seed house. It's been a family enterprise for 118 years. William Park became president in 1967 and assumed his present position in 1982.

He has served as president of the Southern Nurserymen's Association, the S. C. Nurserymen's Association and the National Mail Order Association of Nurserymen. He also is an elder of the First Presbyterian Church. A Clemson graduate, he joined the PC board in 1977 and rotates off this year.

Joseph E. Patrick of Decatur, Ga., retired representative of the John H. Harland Company and a 1937 graduate of Presbyterian College. After early work as a high school principal in Winder and Gainesville, Ga., he joined the Harland Company for a 32-year career. He retired in 1981, a member of the corporate board of directors.

A past president of the PC Alumni Association, Joe Patrick received the Alumni Service Award in 1984—the same year he joined the board. He also is an elder of Decatur's Columbia Presbyterian Church who extends his work to synod and General Assembly.

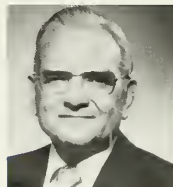

Bob E. Pettit of Anderson, S. C., senior minister of the First Presbyterian Church. A 1959 Presbyterian College graduate, he accepted the Anderson call in 1978 after eight years as pastor of Spartanburg's Westminster Church. Earlier pulpits were in Aiken and Abbeville.

Bob Pettit's special interest in the elderly is reflected in his service on the boards of the Presbyterian Home of South Carolina and the Atlanta Area Presbyterian Home. Holder of the MDiv degree from Columbia Seminary and DMin from McCormick Seminary, he became a PC trustee in 1981. Daughter Ann also is a PC graduate.

J. Davison Philips of Decatur, Ga., who recently retired after 11 years as president of Columbia Seminary, has 20 years on the PC board. Before the seminary presidency, he was senior minister of the Decatur Presbyterian Church (1954-75) following four years at the Thomasville (Ga.) First Church.

He also has been moderator of the old Georgia Synod, chairman of Atlanta Presbytery Council and on numerous General Assembly assignments. "Dixie" Philips earned his BA degree from Hampden-Sydney College, BD from Columbia Seminary and PhD from the University of Edinburgh. He has an honorary DD from PC.

Alexander M. Quattlebaum of Florence and Georgetown, S. C., board chairman of Harlee-Quattlebaum, Inc., a major construction firm. He was president of the company for many years and a national director of the Associated General Contractors of America. A Clemson graduate with master's in engineering from Cornell, Alex Quattlebaum is a fellow of the American Society of Civil Engineers.

He is a trustee emeritus of Clemson after 16 years on that board and currently serves on the state college board of trustees. He also has been active on corporate boards and as elder of the Georgetown Presbyterian Church. A PC trustee since 1974, he is the founder-benefactor of the Quattlebaum Honor Scholarship program.

J. Sidney Query of Mt. Pleasant, S. C., owns the Krispy Kreme Doughnut Company with headquarters in Charleston and with service extended to other areas of the lowcountry.

His 13 years as a trustee here (dating back to 1972) and his work on boards of two other church-related institutions reflect the breadth of his commitment as a Presbyterian elder of the Mt. Pleasant Church. Although Sid Query earned his BS degree from The Citadel, sons Dick and Gordon are Presbyterian College graduates.

Albert F. (Pete) Sloan of Charlotte, chairman of the board and president of Lance, Inc., a leading producer of snack foods. Joining Lance soon after graduating from Presbyterian in 1955, he rose to executive vice president in 1967 and then president five years later and chairman in 1977.

Pete Sloan has served as chairman of the American Biscuit and Cracker Manufacturers Association and on the boards of numerous corporations and institutions. A former president of the PC Alumni Association, he received the 1975 Alumni Gold P Award. He is a Carmel Presbyterian Church elder now completing his tenth year as a PC trustee.

O. Mitchell Smith of Moultrie, Ga., president of the Colquitt County Citizens & Southern Bank. In addition to his banking responsibilities, he has been a leader in youth work, the local and state Chamber of Commerce, the county's development and hospital authorities and other community endeavors.

Mitchell Smith also is an in harmony with the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church and shall make and enact bylaws, rules and regulations for the government of the College and for the preservation of order and good morals therein, not inconsistent with the laws of the land or the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (USA).

Under this broad authority, the trustees make the ultimate decisions for the guidance and operation of the institution. While responsible to its constituencies, the board is empowered to function independently in the control it exerts over the college business and properties. Church courts do not seek to intrude in any way into the oversight authority.

The board of trustees, for its part, is careful not to get involved in the day-to-day administrative matters of the college. Dr. Orr said:

"The trustees want to be informed about all significant issues and are ready to establish policy where necessary. But they have never tried to assume my duties, and I am deeply grateful for this style of delegation. We maintain open communications here, and I think the board appreciates this openness. It promotes a level of trust and respect that must exist if a college is to operate effectively. Otherwise, suspicion and distrust can pervade a campus and paralyze an administration."

The president and other college officers, elected by the trustees, are responsible to and hold office "at the pleasure" of the board. They work through seven permanent trustee committees and occasional ad hoc committees of special purpose. For example, it was a special committee that searched out Ken Orr and elected him to the presidency eight years ago.

The Trustee Committees

Executive: W. Frank Harrington, chairman; Wilson C. Wearn, vice chairman; Hugh S. Jacobs, secretary (Mrs. Betty Stall in 1987); Nathaniel R. Johnson, James W. Spradley, William H. Todd, Albert F. Sloan, Joseph E. Patrick, James P. McLain.

Academic Affairs: Nathaniel R. Johnson, chairman; Louise Gallant, Robert R. Hill, James B. Holderman, James P. McLain, J. Davison Philips, Walter D. Smith.

Finance: James W. Spradley, chairman; Alex M. Quattlebaum, Bennett A. Brown, Lynn W. Cooper, O. Mitchell Smith, Barton Tuck (William Cassels, Jr., in 1987).

Student Activities: William H. Todd, chairman; Ronald W. Allen, Joe W. B. Brooks, Norris L. Hogans, Lillian Hollis, Paul T. Eckel, Betty P. Stall.

Physical Development: Albert F. Sloan, chairman; William A. Barnette, Jr., James E. Fogartie, H. Caldwell Harper, William J. Park, John A. Kuhne (John D. Pellett, Jr., and James O. Speed on in 1987).

Financial Development: Wilson C. Wearn, chairman; Irwin Belk, William W. Gaston, Ellison S. McKissick, John C. West, Robert Vance (Richard Monk, Jr., in 1987).

Honorary Degrees: Joseph E. Patrick, chairman; Hugh S. Jacobs, B. E. Pettit, J. Sidney Query, C. A. McArthur, Jr.

elder of the First Presbyterian Church. A Davidson College graduate, he went on for specialized training at the School of Banking of the South at Louisiana State University. He became a PC trustee in 1985.

W. Douglas Smith of Florence, S. C., president-emeritus of Francis Marion College since his 1983 retirement after 13 years as chief executive. He was president of Salisbury State College (Md.), following nine years at Winthrop as dean, academic vice president and professor of psychology.

A widely recognized educator, Doug Smith earned his BA from Lincoln Memorial University (Tenn.), then added MA and PhD degrees from the University of Michigan. He is an active member of the First Presbyterian Church who joined the PC board in 1984.

James W. Spradley of Eastman, Ga., served for a number of years as president of Stuckey's Stores and corporate vice president of Pet Incorporated.

Since his retirement from there in 1981, he has been a consultant and the secretary-treasurer of Standard Candy Company.

Jim Spradley is a past board chairman of the Georgia Business & Industry Association and a director of the National Confectioners Association. A graduate of Princeton University and elder of the First Presbyterian Church, he now has 15 years as a trustee. Daughter Meredith is a 1986 graduate.

Mrs. Elizabeth Peace (Edward H.) Stall, Greenville, S. C., church and civic leader. Her deep interest in religious affairs is reflected in her present service as an elder of the First Presbyterian Church and her past chairmanship of the Christian education committee.

She currently serves on the board of trustees of St. Francis Community Hospital, on the national horticulture committee of Garden Club of America and is a past member of the South Carolina Commission on Mental Retardation. Holder of a BA degree in history-political science from Hollins College, Betty Stall was named to the PC board of trustees in 1985.

William H. Todd, Jr., of Dalton, Ga., minister of the First Presbyterian Church. He has served this congregation since 1978 after five years at the Greenville (Miss.) First Church and an earlier service at Wrightsville Beach, N. C.

Within his community, Hal Todd has been especially active in promoting better race relations and in his concern for the indigent through service on various local and county boards. He also has led in General Assembly, synod and presbytery assignments. After receiving his BA from Davidson

The board utilizes its permanent committee structure as a fundamental ingredient to the careful and efficient oversight of college operations. These seven committees assume the following responsibilities authorized in the bylaws:

1. The Executive Committee—during intervals between board meetings—takes on all the powers, privileges and prerogatives of the board except those expressly reserved by the board to itself or by the charter. It reviews honorary degree recommendations received from the Honorary Degree Committee and appoints all ad hoc committees, such as the one to nominate board officers.
2. The Academic Affairs Committee is responsible for the long-range educational plans and policies. Its reach includes faculty recruitments, appointments, tenure and development as well as recommendations for appointments... the library, teaching methods and teaching aids... evaluation of academic affairs... recruitment and admission of students, academic counseling and guidance, academic discipline... and the management of the financial aid program.
3. The Finance Committee is responsible for long-range planning in the area of finance and budget and for submitting the budget to the board. It sees to the annual auditing of the books and accounts of the treasurer and business manager, with sub-committee to review and report. It also is responsible for endowment and investments... directing and controlling the treasurer in the investment of all permanent funds of the college and retaining the power to make or change investments of such funds.
4. The Student Activities Committee has oversight of all extracurricular activities of students... including student government, social activities, non-varsity athletics, student organizations and fraternities. Its reach also includes the spiritual development of students... all housing, food and medical services relating to them... and such discipline as is appropriately assigned to the offices of the dean of students and associate dean of students.

5. The Financial Development Committee assumes responsibility in the range of fund-raising that includes special gifts, annual giving, foundation gifts, corporation gifts, deferred gifts, wills, bequests and special campaigns. It also covers alumni and public relations and all programs growing out of this area.
6. The Physical Development Committee is responsible for developing a master plan for the college, selecting architects and handling all matters concerning bids and the supervision of construction. Its reach also includes maintenance of the physical plant, to include all necessary repairs and improvements.
7. The Honorary Degrees Committee recommends to the board the names of persons to receive honorary degrees from the college after careful consideration of qualified candidates.

President Orr and his officers serve as advisors to these committees and report to them semi-annually as a standard practice toward keeping the board informed of every aspect of the PC operations. The reports also may recommend action or respond to requests of the board.

Other staff members may participate in committee sessions. And to broaden participation and insights further, some PC students and faculty are authorized to serve on several board committees, where they regularly contribute to the board's understanding of campus issues.

The trustees meet twice annually on regular schedule in March and November on the college campus. Special meet-

College, he earned his MDiv from Union Seminary in Virginia. A trustee since 1980.

N. Barton Tuck, Jr., of Greenville, S.C., chairman of the board and chief executive officer of U. S. Shelter Corporation, the real estate management and development firm he founded in 1972. Earlier experience included Financial Planning Associates after positions with Smith, Barney, Harris & Upham and S. D. Leidesdorf.

Barton Tuck is a civic leader and active on corporate boards. He became a PC trustee in 1985. Besides his BS degree from the University of North Carolina, he holds the CPA designation. Daughter Linda received her PC degree last May.

Wilson C. Wearn of Greenville, S.C., chairman of the board of Multimedia, Inc., communications firm composed of newspapers, television and radio stations and cable TV franchises. He was named Multimedia chairman in 1981 after serving as president since 1978. And last year he received the 1985 Distinguished Service Award of the National Association of Broadcasters. He is a former chairman of NAB's joint board of directors and its television board.

Wilson Wearn previously was with the Broadcast Bureau of the Federal Communications Commission and was a co-founding partner of a Washington, D. C., consulting electronics firm. A Clemson graduate and elder of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, he joined the PC board in 1981 and is now in his fourth year as vice-chairman.

John C. West of Hilton Head Island, S.C., attorney, former Governor of South Carolina and former United States Ambassador to Saudi Arabia. Before opening his Hilton Head law office in 1981, he spent four years as ambassador after being governor 1971-75. Earlier, in addition to partnership in his Camden law firm, John West served for 12 years as a state senator and then four as lieutenant governor.

He is a Presbyterian elder and a director of numerous corporations. A PC trustee since 1984, he holds the BA degree from The Citadel and law degree from the University of South Carolina.

W. Frank Harrington, senior minister of Atlanta's Peachtree Presbyterian Church, is both eloquent and dynamic as the current leader of the PC board of trustees. A 1957 Presbyterian College graduate, he joined the board in 1978 and was elected chairman four years later. Since that time, the college momentum has accelerated to new levels of support and recognition that generate even greater confidence in the future.

The story of Peachtree Church under Frank Harrington is one of tremendous growth—from 2,500 members to more than 6,500—in the 15 years of his ministry there. It also is the story of a remarkable church program that reaches out to a broad variety of community needs. He went to this pulpit in 1971 after six years as senior minister of North Augusta's Fairview Church and an earlier pastorate in Hinesville, Ga. Along the way, he has served as moderator of three presbyteries and of the Synod of the Southeast... trustee of numerous institutions... and the leader of many civic activities. Both his MDiv and ThM degrees were earned at Columbia Seminary; his two honorary degrees, awarded by PC and Oglethorpe University.

ings may be held at other times and other places to consider matters deemed appropriate.

For example, an off-campus session is set for January to give the board sufficient time to consider a capital funds project and to review and approve another long-range plan. The first six-year plan of the Orr administration was carefully considered by the trustees in 1981. Since its adoption, Dr. Orr has kept the board informed of the plan's implementation. More recently, he has led in the preparation of a second six-year plan—covering the years 1987-1992—which is now being reviewed by the board.

Whatever the mission in oversight, in planning and in assistance with the execution of plans, this board of trustees responds to the call of Presbyterian College. The results speak eloquently in solid facts: At a time when many private colleges are threatened, this institution grows stronger in every way—widely recognized for the stability and integrity of its program.

"Anyone who attends our board meetings leaves impressed by the involvement and interest of our trustees in every area of campus life," President Orr pointed out. "Furthermore, they are not a board of 'rubber stampers' who only lend their name to the college for a while. I am convinced that our board of trustees is as strong and capable as that of any liberal arts college in America."

New Trustees on Board in 1987

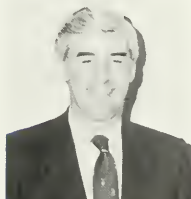

William T. Cassels, Jr., of Columbia, S.C., president of Southeastern Freight Lines. He has headed the operation of this firm since 1976 after holding executive positions with it in earlier years. His responsibility is carried beyond the local company through his service to the trucking industry as president of the National Trucking Association and the S. C. Trucking Association, and he also participates in civic affairs.

An elder of the Eastminster Presbyterian Church, Billy Cassels has been chairman of Congaree Presbytery Council and a presbytery moderator. He earned his BA degree at Davidson.

Richard H. Monk, Jr., of West Point, Ga., president of the international division and corporate vice president of West Point-Pepperell, Inc. He moves into the trustee ranks after having been board of visitors chairman two years ago. Attorney Richard Monk joined West Point-Pepperell as legal counsel in 1965... became vice president in 1973... and international division president in 1983.

His many professional affiliations include being president of the Georgia Textile Manufacturers Association, and he is an active elder of the West Point Presbyterian Church. Both his BA and law degrees were earned at Emory University.

John D. Pellett, Jr., of Greenville, S.C., chairman of the board of Triangle Construction Company. He founded this firm 39 years ago and served as president until moving into the chairmanship in 1976.

John Pellett is a past president of the Carolinas branch of the Associated General Contractors of America and has been on the board of the national organization. A Fourth Presbyterian Church elder and former presbytery moderator, he also is active in civic affairs and as a corporate board member. His engineering degree is from Vanderbilt... daughter Joan is a 1980 PC graduate.

James O. Speed, Jr., of Marietta, Ga., senior minister of the First Presbyterian Church. He has served this church since 1972 after eight years at Birmingham's Trinity Church. He also had four years with the Board of Christian Education of the General Assembly.

Jim Speed has been moderator of two presbyteries, Synod of the Southeast coordinating council chairman and active in many other church and civic endeavors. He holds the BA from Davidson College, and both BD and DMin degrees from Columbia Seminary. Daughter Beth is a 1981 PC graduate.

Exploring media ethics

National authorities in mass communications addressed enthusiastic audiences of students and area residents as PC's first annual Arnold Symposium explored the provocative subject of media ethics.

The theme "Ethics and the Media" permeated November's campus atmosphere for three days. With NBC News' Edwin Newman as the keynoter, this program focused on both print and electronic media—ranging from news reporting and TV news production to film-making and the impact of editorial cartoons. The speakers are caught in action below, along with brief capsules of their remarks.

Arnold Symposium is named for benefactor Ernest J. Arnold '35, director-trustee of the Russell Trust of Atlanta which has endowed the Russell Project in media literacy at Presbyterian. After he and his wife attended the inaugural program, Dr. Arnold asked: "How can you possibly top this one next year?"

"News has become theater" An Introduction to Media Literacy

Wally Bowen '74 Director of Public Information, University of North Carolina-Asheville

Over the last 100 years, the American public has begun to take the media for granted . . . What was once an in-depth look at local and national news by the printed media has been taken over by superficial feature stories and glossy television commercials.

"The content of the earlier print culture is being rooted out of the news business. News has become theater. News is now a matter of the performing arts, really . . . It requires a great deal of imagination and critical thinking—independent thinking—to step out of this artificial, mediated world and see it as it is . . . Americans will have to take a hard look at the media, if they want to evoke any change."

"Polluting the minds of our children" Violence in the Media

Jim Wall Editor of The Christian Century and The Christian Ministry

"The motion picture industry has trivialized sexuality in the name of freedom. It has trivialized violence and made it attractive, when by definition violence is ugly. . . . Film executives have abused the rating system on films designed to alert the public about the nature of their content."

This industry must voluntarily restrict the amount of violence and pornography which appears in films or face the possibility of mass government censorship.

"In the next five to ten years, a Supreme Court ruling may determine that pollution of the minds of our children is as dangerous as is the pollution of the air, the land and the water."

"It's a matter of judgment" Looking at the Ethics of News Reporting

Edwin Newman Retired NBC News Correspondent, TV Moderator, Author

"News is a business. News organizations compete with one another, and competition brings about abuses and encourages exaggeration and sensationalism . . . There is no institutional safeguard to protect the public from bad reporting. We do sometimes squeeze stories to get the most out of them. But we are, on the whole, fair."

To a degree, news is an accidental business. What may be a front page story to one editor may be only an inside story to another. In other words, what goes on the air or on the front page is not determined by bias. It's a matter of judgment . . . Only when the public understands what is at work when such decisions are made will the press be as responsible as it should be.

"There never has been enough criticism of the news business from within the business or from without. What we do has consequences to the nation and to the world. Is there a demand for first-class, positive journalism? Because without the demand, first class, positive journalism will not exist."

"A lot of loose ends dangling" Journalistic Ethics

Ewin Yoder Pulitzer Prize-winning Editorialist, Washington Post Writers Group

Because of the nature of journalism, reporters must often write about subjects they know little about. This factor "causes the press to leave a lot of loose ends dangling." Lack of knowledge sometimes leads to inaccuracies in stories and to libel suits, but the media usually win their cases simply because libel is so hard to prove legally.

"We have to confess with a blush of shame that we have seen truth put to flight... while short-term goals of self-defense are served... One way to solve this problem is for reporters to find a way to signal their doubts to readers at the beginning of the story. It may be, however, that a candid revealing of reservations would ruin the mystique of journalism."

"Have I been as fair as I can be" Ethics in the Media and TV News Productions

Jo Franklin-Trout Washington Producer of Public Broadcasting's MacNeil/Lehrer Report

Americans rely on the media directly for much of the information they acquire today. Because of this fact, reporters owe it to themselves and to their readers to write news stories as fairly and accurately as possible... It may seem a simple task, but the issue has become complicated in recent times by the fact that reporters count more heavily on anonymous sources and news "leaks" for their details.

"The role of journalism is not simply to take what's given to the press and unequivocally move forward with it because it's an interesting story from unattributed sources. Reporters and editors should routinely ask themselves at the end of every story: 'Have I been as fair as I can be?'"

"One of the most cynically amoral professions" Ethics in Film making

David Cook Emory University Professor, Author of A History of Narrative Film

The influence of movies on values has concerned Americans throughout the history of film making. While viewers have always been concerned with films and morality, the recent popularity of graphic horror films has added more to that concern. Violence in the former of "psycho-slasher" films has become an important part of the R-rated movie.

"Film making in this country is—and nearly always has been—one of the most cynically amoral media professions going... Our movie-made children; the care of them seems only quaint, and we can only hope that some day they won't pay us back for our indifference."

"Walking a thin line" The Ethics of Public Television

Benjamin Dunlap South Carolina ETV Writer-Producer, University of South Carolina Professor

Public television has drifted away from its main purpose of education and has become more concerned with issues traditionally facing commercial television... It was created initially to fill in the educational gaps and still serves this function in some respects. Increasingly today, however, in the face of budget cuts and low ratings, PBS is walking a thin line between education and entertainment.

"For the desperate truth of public broadcasting, while created to be different, is none-the-less the same."

Symposium . . .

This panel discussion drew incisive remarks about media ethics as the experts interacted on the symposium topic. They are, from the left: Benjamin Dunlap, Edwin Yoder, David Cook, Jo Franklin-Trout, Wally Bowen and Jim Wall.

Edwin Newman and wife congratulated Frances and Ernest Arnold on the symposium concept designed to educate the public to demand first-class media coverage.

"I like PC's effort to stimulate good writing," Edwin Newman said of the essay contest on "Ethics and the Media" that drew more than 420 entries from high school students in several states. He presented the first place award to Sally Redding of Winston-Salem.

Accreditation reaffirmed for another ten years

Full accreditation of Presbyterian College is reaffirmed for another ten-year period by official action of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

The decision was announced at the Association's early-December meeting and came without reservations or qualifications. As expected, the action brought to a successful conclusion here the detailed procedure required each decade of every accredited college.

PC completed last spring a self-study process that covered almost two years. It examined and assessed all aspects of the college program—involving faculty, students, trustees and alumni—in the most thorough self-evaluation ever undertaken by PC.

Academic Vice President Bill Moncrief explained further:

"A SACS visiting committee then used this self-study report as the basis for its own thorough on-campus investigation over a period of several days. The committee made recommendations and suggestions about the PC program, reviewed our responses and reported to the Association's Committee on Standards. Everything moved well each step of the way, so we were reasonably certain of the outcome.

"The process of self-study and accreditation is a long and laborious one. But it is also an important one—especially the self-study, which gives the institution an opportunity to identify its strengths and weaknesses and to plan for the future."

Dr. Moncrief joined President Orr in special words of appreciation to PC's self-study steering committee and to Chairman Dave Needham, professor of history, and Vice Chairman Jim Skinner, professor of English. They also congratulated the entire faculty and staff on a job well done.

Trustees approve final budget

While on campus for their annual fall meeting in November, the trustees adopted a revised final budget of $11.8 million for PC's 1986-87 fiscal year ending next June 30.

This amount represents a 7 percent increase over the record $11 million budget approved tentatively last March, according to Business Manager-Treasurer George E. (Skip) Zubrod. The increase results from higher income and expenses produced by the fall enrollment of 1,043—the first time the student body has topped the one thousand mark.

As in past years, the operating budget maintains its proper balance of revenue and expenditures.

Orr serves General Assembly

Two off-campus activities of the Presbyterian Church (USA) recently enlisted the services of PC President Kenneth B. Orr.

At the denomination-wide 1986 session, he was elected to serve on the committee on Three members of the faculty and staff received 1986 Outstanding Service Awards in presentations made by the PC board of visitors this fall. They are shown here being congratulated by President Kenneth B. Orr (left): Mrs.

Ann P. Martin, secretary to the faculty, with the staff award; and the faculty awards to Mrs. Eugenia G. Carter, assistant professor of chemistry, and Dr. K. Nolon Carter, professor of chemistry and department chairman.

Top honor in Church Youth Leader awards program at PC

Bret Gustafson of Rock Hill's First Presbyterian Church has been named PC's first annual "Church Youth Leader of the Year." He is shown at right receiving the award from President Orr while Chaplain Greg Henley looks on.

Bret's selection came from among a group of "Outstanding Church Youth Leaders" selected by their home churches. All were honored during the regular PC Youth Day program in November.

In addition to his local church leadership, Bret was cited for his work with Bethel Presbytery programs and international missions. He also has a superior high school record.

Presbyterian College inaugurated this awards program in 1986 to recognize the service high school juniors and seniors render their home churches. Citations went to all young people nominated by local congregations of the Synod.

theological education of the General Assembly. This committee has responsibility for the theological seminaries supported by the church, including general oversight, coordination and financing of their operations.

Dr. Orr also will speak at the 1987 Men's Assembly in New Orleans next May—the first national men's convention of the reunited Presbyterian Church (USA). He will address one of the five mini-conferences on the subject "Education and the Christian Faith."

Some 4,000 Presbyterian men from throughout the nation are expected for the May 1-3 Assembly, which has as its theme "Making a Difference."

Jane Hammet publishes article

Jane J. Hammet, assistant professor of physical education, has an article in the October issue of The First Aider, a Cramer Products publication dedicated to the care and prevention of athletic injuries.

The article, entitled "College Uses Software to Improve Football Program," discusses the use of a Cramer computer software program to measure strength, power, endurance, flexibility and body composition to evaluate the fitness of football players by age, position and body weight.

Mrs. Hammet said the physical education department and football staff cooperated in administering the test to all returning football players at the end of last spring's off-season conditioning program. The purposes were four-fold:

1—To use a scientific approach to analyze team fitness; 2—To use the results of the test to evaluate the current conditioning program and to make changes as suggested by the computer program; 3—To provide motivation to players in their off-season and pre-season conditioning programs; and 4—To teach students enrolled in the coaching-minor courses the methods and need for scientific testing of players.

The First Aider goes to all schools and colleges in the country as well as to team physicians and athletic trainers.

MAY

- 10 Commencement

More than 200 student volunteers in nine teams contacted several thousand prospects in the October Phonathon that produced more than $60,000 for Annual Giving. Team competition just naturally emerged, with the women of Belk Hall topping the rest in total dollars raised. The scene at left catches part of the Belk crew in full telephone action.

McDowell joins admissions staff

A few months after receiving her degree last May, Jane McDowell is on the road recruiting students for next year's entering class.

She joined the PC staff in September as an admissions counselor in the office of Margaret Williamson, dean of admissions and financial aid. She replaced Cindy Jacks '84, who resigned after two years to enter business.

During her undergraduate years here, Jane McDowell directed an advisory group of student volunteers who assisted the admissions office with campus tours and other cultivation of prospective students. She graduated with a double major in English and political science, then spent four months as an academic intern in the Atlanta office of US Senator Sam Nunn. Her hometown is Marietta, Ga.

Chapman heads county chamber

Taking office as the new president of the Laurens County Chamber of Commerce in 1987 is Dr. W. Fred Chapman, professor of economics and business administration.

His elevation to succeed Dr. Jim Yarbrough of Laurens brings to this civic leadership position the second PC representative in three years. President Ken Orr was chamber president in 1984.

Dr. Chapman served as president-elect during this past year and was vice president of the chamber's economic development division in 1985. He is enthusiastic about the continued development of Laurens County following the opening of the McCrory Co. distribution center in Clinton and the announcement of Wal-Mart's largest distribution center near Laurens.

Fred Chapman has been active in other community affairs. He served for a number of years as chairman of Clinton's District 56 school board—during which time he was elected president of the South Carolina School Boards Association and then president of the 13-state Southern Regional School Boards Association.

Chapman, who is department chairman as well as professor, joined the PC faculty in 1964 and spent a nine-year interval as academic dean.

Holder in tax seminars

Meredith McQueen Holder, assistant professor of accounting, has been a leader this fall in two regional seminars dealing with the new tax laws.

She spoke on "Quality Control in the Local Practice" at a two-day program at the Myrtle Beach Convention Center. Sponsored by Standard Federal Savings & Loan Association, it was designed to fulfill continuing education requirements for accountants, attorneys and tax preparers and drew broad participation from across the state.

She also was called upon to conduct a pre-meeting seminar for the Western Carolinas chapter of the Institute of Internal Auditors. This group assembled in Greenville last month.

A 1975 PC graduate, Meredith Holder holds the CPA designation and a master of accountancy degree from the University of South Carolina. She joined the faculty in 1985 after being a senior accountant with Elliott Davis & Co. and before that with Ernst & Whinney.

Student leaders in Who's Who

Twenty seniors have been selected for the 1987 edition of Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges.

Nominated by the PC faculty on the basis of solid academic merit, extracurricular leadership, community service and potential for continued success, the group includes 11 women and nine men from six states and one foreign country. They are:

Connie Sue Cline of Orlando, Fla.; Lee Louise Davenport of Poquoson, Va.; Maryanne Elrod and Elizabeth Shannon Hudson, both of Marietta, Ga.; Stuart Gordon Fears III of Macon, Ga.; Mary Elizabeth George of Blythewood, S.C.; Jonathan Cloud Hicklin of Rock Hill, S.C.; Laura Powell Hill of Columbia, S.C.; Katharina Dorothea Kopplin of West Germany; Kimberly Deanne Mathis of North Wilkesboro, N.C.

Robert Joseph Morris and Robert Clay Vernon, both of Brunswick, Ga.; William David Murray of Fort Wayne, Ind.; John Oliver Pittman of Commerce, Ga.; Charles Conway Rettburg of Fountain Inn, S.C.; Michael Allen Sheffield of Carrollton, Ga.; Lisa Carol Shouse of Winston-Salem, N.C.; Leslie Elizabeth Snow of St. Simons Island, Ga.; Kathryn Susan Thomas of Bishopville, S.C.; and Cecil Douglas Warner of Elizabethtown, N.C.

Musical comedy returned to campus this fall with a five-performance run of The Fantasticks.

Blue Hose Sports

Cally Gault presided over halftime ceremonies that honored Bob Waters during Thanksgiving football game.

Bob Waters Day:

A salute to his indomitable spirit with positive words that reflect the indomitable spirit that has kept him coaching Western Carolina as a regular contender for the Southern Conference championship.

This fall, Waters became the subject of feature stories carried on the sports pages throughout the country. They dealt with his courageous battle against the encroaching malady and of his success in making Western Carolina a national contender in its NCAA division.

And CBS Sports carried a portion of PC's Thanksgiving tribute on its Saturday college game-of-the-week at halftime.

A 1960 PC graduate, Bob Waters was student body president and quarterbacked the 1959 Blue Hose into the Tangerine (now Citrus) Bowl, where he was voted most valuable player. After several years of professional ball with the San Francisco 49ers, he returned to PC as an assistant coach for two years, then went to Stanford University as an assistant before becoming the head coach at Western Carolina in 1969.

Mid-season slump produces 5-6 record

They won four of the first five games and routed Newberry in the season finale to return the Bronze Derby to its rightful place in the PC trophy case.

But in between, the football Blue Hose dropped five straight encounters to end the 1986 season with a 5-6 record. While many bright spots appeared, overall it was a disappointing year for a team ranked well in pre-season polls and in the NAIA's Top Ten nationally at mid-season.

Turnovers and crucial penalties against Furman and four tough opponents in the SAC-8—strongest conference of the NAIA—contributed to the string of losses. But the team came back with an impressive 35-26 performance against Newberry that restored spirits as Coach Elliott Poss and his staff begin planning for next year.

As expected, the rushing attack proved to be the most effective weapon. Jimmy Lindsey and Stevie Riggins alternated at tailback, with Lindsey collecting 711 total yards from scrimmage (a 5.6 per-carry average) and Riggins adding 706 for a 6.2 average. Next behind these leaders came Evander Gerald on the strength of 438 yards (4.4 per carry).

While the passing offense dipped from its early season high, quarterback Scotty Mozingo concluded the year with 1,181 total as he hit the airwaves 187 times and completed 81. His favorite receivers were Del Barksdale (15 receptions), Eddie Rogers (14) and John Clark and Glenn Jackso. (13 each).

Jimmy Lindsey on the move

Linebackers Harold Anderson and Sam Pinckney led the Blue Hose defense in terms of total assisted and unassisted tackles for the year.

The 1986 football results: Won: Georgia Southwestern, 35-10; Lenoir Rhyne, 24-0; Wofford, 31-7; Catawba, 12-0; and Newberry, 35-20. Lost: Citadel, 13-15; Elon, 13-36; Mars Hill, 10-12; Furman, 31-45; Gardner-Webb, 13-35; and Carson-Newman, 0-19.

Volleyball has slow finish

Sophomore Sanya Alexander made the All-District team again, but otherwise the 1986 volleyball season proved a disappointment to Coach Libby Galloway.

After getting off to a promising start, the youthful Lady Blue Hose encountered difficulties in the last half of the season to finish with a record of 15 wins and 27 losses. They went 24-20 last year.

In addition to Alexander, Coach Galloway cited Tonya Williams, Lou Hughes and Angie Thompson for their performances during the season. The sophomore-dominated team will have all lettermen except one returning.

Basketball shoots to fast start

Only a close last-minute loss to highly ranked College of Charleston prevented PC's basketball team from entering the Christmas holiday period undefeated.

Even so, the Blue Hose posted an impressive 8-1 record during pre-holiday play—including the Little Four championship—and gave challenge to other contenders in the fierce District 6 competition.

"I am both pleased and a little surprised at the progress of our team," Coach Gregg Blatt said. "After losing five seniors from last year, I expected we'd have a few early ups and downs before hitting our stride during the second semester.

"We've been fortunate to come from behind and win three games with a 'never-say-die' spirit. That factor and the rapid improvement of several individuals has made for a good first semester."

He pointed with pride to Wiley Adams, district "player-of-the-year" as a junior last season, as a strong possibility to become PC's first basketball first-team All-America. In nine games so far this season, team co-captain Adams leads in scoring with a 21-point average and in rebounds at 9.

Giving scoring balance to the Blue Hose offense are three others in double figures: 6-8 transfer James Scott, with a 13-point average; and Chris Walters and Kelvin Montague, both averaging 10 points each. All three are juniors playing their first starting ball on the PC court. The other starter and co-captain, Doug Sadler, adds leadership dash as point guard with a 9 point scoring average to complement his 4.5 assists average.

Marie Bolt leads women

Women's basketball at 5-4

The Lady Blue Hose lost their final two games of the first semester to carry a record of 5 wins and 4 losses into their holiday "break."

Coach Byron Rucker has a young team utilizing some sophomores and freshmen. They already have won almost as many games as of last season, and he expects the improvement to continue as they gain more experience in a district that often produces the national NAIA champion.

Marie Bolt, 6-3 senior center, sets the pace with a scoring average of 16 points-per-game. She gains strong support from freshman Leah McCullough, averaging over 13 points each contest. Ranking next in the scoring column are senior Nancy Renwick, sophomore Sanya Alexander and freshman Tonya Williams.

Soccer's arrived:

Polson named coach-of-year

Soccer really came into its own at PC this fall.

Ralph Polson was named "coach of the year" in the fast District 6 competition as he led his team to NAIA ranking in the Top 10 in the South.

The Blue Hose achieved new team highs with an 11-5-2 season record, eight shutout victories and fourth place finish among 11 teams in the district now considered among NAIA's strongest. Freshmen Peter Cox and Allan McRoberts made the All-South team.

Hall of Fame honors Jacobs for contributions to tennis

Late PC President William P. Jacobs II entered the South Carolina Tennis Hall of Fame this fall.

He was recognized for his leadership in popularizing the sport in this state and throughout the South during his 1935-45 tenure as college chief executive. William P. Jacobs III '40 accepted the honor in behalf of his father at the induction ceremonies conducted by the S. C. Tennis Association.

President Jacobs built the all-weather tennis plant here and brought in professional Bill Lufler to develop PC teams that ranked among the top ten nationally. He started the tennis clinic for developing junior players (a model adopted officially by the US Lawn Tennis Association), became a vice president of that organization and had PC play annual host to the Southern Junior and Boys Championship Tournament.

Dr. Jacobs also organized the state's first big-time tennis exhibitions, with world-famous players Don Budge, Bill Tilden, Bobby Riggs and Alice Marble drawing large crowds to this campus to see them play. And by the time he retired from Presbyterian College in 1945 to become president of the American Cotton Manufacturers Association, this college was recognized as one of the leading tennis centers in the nation.

Late Night THOUGHTS on Education

By J. William Moncrief

They bring insights into some "essential ingredients of a quality college experience." PC's new vice president for academic affairs delivered this address to students assembled for opening convocation of the fall semester.

Between last December when I was offered the job which I now hold at Presbyterian College and August when we finally moved into our new home in Clinton, I made a number of trips between here and my former home in Social Circle, Georgia—22 trips to be exact, for a total of over 7,000 miles.

In order to accomplish as much as possible in Clinton, I often left on my return trip to Georgia late in the evening. Consequently, I traveled the country roads through Comer, Carleton, Colbert, Cross Hill and Calhoun Falls, High Shoals and Good Hope rather late at night. Most of the time I drove alone.

Someone has said that America is filled with people who long for eternal life—but who don't know how to fill a rainy Sunday afternoon.

Perhaps the truest measure of our characters, and certainly one of the best tests of the value of our educations, is how we relate to ourselves when we are alone, how we entertain ourselves and pass the time when outside stimuli are at a minimum. But how rare are the occasions when we are left alone with our thoughts. Even rainy Sunday afternoons can be filled with televised sports events.

But here I was, alone, driving through the darkened countryside with nothing except my thoughts to keep me company. You may not be surprised to learn that my thoughts often drifted to academic administration, to liberal arts education, and to my transition from Oxford College to PC.

I would like to share some of these late-night thoughts with you this morning. You may be amused at my circu-itous mental processes, but you may also get some insights into what I believe to be some of the essential ingredients of a quality college experience.

Stars and General Education

I have long been convinced that a quality education is one which is carefully balanced. There must be specialized vocational preparation, but this must be within the context of general, liberal arts studies.

In the extreme, a specialist is someone who learns more and more about less and less until she knows everything about nothing; a generalist is someone who learns less and less about more and more until he knows nothing about everything.

What we need are individuals whose education places them between these two extremes, whose specialized education has prepared them to make significant contributions in their chosen professions but whose general education will help them adapt to changes in their vocations, changes which no one can now foresee. We need individuals who understand that all truly significant problems require input from a variety of specialties and who can call upon an array of knowledge in a broad range of disciplines.

All this came to mind on a particularly cold night in February. The totally clear sky, filled with brilliant stars, reminded me of my first teaching position after graduate school.

Amherst College had addressed the need for general education by providing three courses: one each in the natural sciences, the social sciences, and the humanities. The natural science course used astronomy as the basis for teaching students, who were in general not science majors, how science operates.

As is often the case in such programs, the younger members of the science faculty were assigned the duty of teaching this course. And that is how I, with absolutely no background in astronomy, found myself lying on my back on the Amherst playing fields on numerous frigid New England nights, learning to identify the stars and their constellations. I don't know about my students, but the experience certainly made a lasting impression on me. After twenty years, recognizing in a cold Georgia sky the stars that make up the constellation Orion was sufficient to trigger thoughts of these early experiences which began a life-long quest for the elements which make up an educational program of true quality.

Serendipity

That night in February was so clear that I thought also that I could pick out the Seven Sisters of the Pleiades which, according to Greek mythology, are the seven daughters of Atlas who were turned into a cluster of stars. For some unknown reason my mind associates these seven mythological sisters with three characters in a Persian fairy tale, The Three Princes of Serendip, from whose exploits we get one of my favorite words.

Serendipity is defined as the faculty for making desirable discoveries by accident. There are three things to notice in this definition. First, a serendipitous discovery is desirable; it is good. Second, it occurs by accident; it is unexpected. And third, even though it occurs unexpectedly, it requires a certain attitude, a certain inclination—preparation is necessary.

Pasteur's discovery of penicillin is a good example of serendipity, as are numerous other discoveries from galvanized rubber to anti-leukemia drugs. While they were looking for something else, these modern princes of Serendip observed an unexpected event whose importance their education and experience had prepared them to recognize.

It is serendipity if in the course of weeding your garden you discover and recognize a gemstone. It is serendipity when a sentence in a contemporary novel produces the "ah ha" of recognition which helps put the pieces of your life together.

As far as I am concerned, serendipity is one of the most important distinguishing features of a liberal arts education. We need, of course, to assign ourselves goals and to work diligently toward these goals if we are to expect success in our intellectual, social, physical, and spiritual lives. But while we are toiling away, we must also be open for those sudden insights, the soul-wrenching beauties, the life-changing revelations which indeed may put it all together and make it all worthwhile.

Wildflowers

When my son was younger, we hiked together on numerous occasions in the mountains of north Georgia and North Carolina. My interest in wildflowers began during this time as an excuse to stop and rest while examining an unfamiliar bloom along the trail. The list of species which I have been able to identify reached five hundred this summer when I stopped on an interstate highway in Kentucky and climbed down into the ditch to photograph a flower which I had never seen before.

This interest in identifying flowers has mystified some people. Surely one can enjoy flowers without having to learn and remember a lot of names, they say. But flowers are like people: you don't really notice them until you know their names and learn who they are. Only then do you become truly aware of them and learn to appreciate and to care about them.

It seems to me that this is also a characteristic of education: learning the names of things, what they are and how they operate; coming to appreciate, to enjoy, to understand, and to care about them.

Blackberries

I am always, at least subconsciously, on the lookout for wildflowers blooming along the roadside. After a period of beautiful, warm weather this spring, the temperature had dropped and the night was quite chilly, and particularly dark. The headlights of the car occasionally picked out small white flowers in the fencerows and along the edge of the woods. Judging from their general appearance, I decided they must be blackberry blossoms. After all, a cold snap in spring when the blackberries are in bloom is called Blackberry Winter.

At that point my memories took over as I recalled picking blackberries for twenty-five cents a gallon as a child in South Georgia; briars and chigger bites; hot blackberry cobbles topped with ice cream; all the snakes I was sure were lurking in the blackberry thickets but which I never saw (although as Annie Dillard says, "I don't know how many of them have seen me.")

And a poem by Elizabeth Barrett Browning which includes these lines:

Earth's crammed with heaven,
And every common bush afire with God;
But only he who sees takes off his shoes;
The rest sit around it and pluck blackberries.

An education should teach us to see. It should bring to us an awareness, wonder, understanding and appreciation of the worlds of nature, of society, of ourselves: worlds crammed with simple and complex things, facts and people worth knowing and caring about. We should be inspired to take off our shoes in wonder and appreciation but also, I would add, we should be inspired to roll up our sleeves and to get to work solving the problems which we also should become more aware of—picking the blackberries among the chiggers and thorns, if you will.

Bugs on the Windshield

Later in the spring, after Blackberry Winter had ended, the insects came out; and one night there seemed to be thousands of kamikaze bugs intent on committing hari-kari on my windshield. I had a momentary twinge of regret at all that life going to waste there before my eyes. But my regret soon disappeared when I remembered that 75 percent of all the world's species are insects and that most of these species have lots of representatives.

I recall reading somewhere that if we began the year with a single pair of fruit flies and kept all members of each succeeding generation of offspring alive long enough for them to breed in their normal fashion, at the end of the year there would be enough living descendants from the original pair to make a ball with a diameter of over 95 million miles.

Ten percent of all the earth's species are also parasitic insects. In her book Pilgrim at Tinker Creek, Annie Dillard relates some rather gruesome observations of parasites which I won't repeat in detail this morning. I will simply mention that one involved watching a giant water bug suck the life fluids out of a frog, leaving only a deflated, dry skin.

She then tells the story of an Eskimo who asked the local priest, "If I did not know about God and sin, would I go to Hell?" "No," said the priest, "not if you did not know." "Then why," asked the Eskimo earnestly, "did you tell me?"

Ms. Dillard relates this story to the disturbing pieces of information which have come to her through her education and her observations and says that if she did not know about such things as the giant water bug she would not be held responsible for them, but "since I have seen it I must somehow deal with it, take it into account."

Some of the information which we learn in our lifetime of education about society and ourselves as well as about the natural world is difficult, disturbing and unpleasant. But as Ms. Dillard says, we must "deal with it, take it into account." And in some cases do something about it. As we learn about things and people and come to care about them, in addition to experiencing wonder and enjoyment, we must be prepared to deal responsibly with unpleasant problems as well: poverty in the social world, pollution in the natural world, mental illness in the personal world. A life of good citizenship and of service should be a result of a good education.

Country Music

I often listened to tapes on my cassette player during my solitary trips back and forth between Georgia and South Carolina. My tape collection ranges from recordings of Garrison Keilor's Prairie Home Companion to Chopin. Since it was usually too dark to find a particular tape, I would simply take one out at random and put it into the player, enjoying whatever it might be.

One night after listening to Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, the next tape started out with Lynne Anderson's classic rendition of "I Never Promised You a Rose Garden."

I like almost all kinds of music, including so called "country" music. A good bit of sociology can be learned from the lyrics. And they are also often fun to listen to. Where else could you hear such depth of feeling as the following?

Home-grown tomatoes, home-grown tomatoes,
What would life be like without home-grown tomatoes?
There's only two things money can't buy:
That's true love and home-grown tomatoes.

But, back to Lynne Anderson and "I Never Promised You a Rose Garden." This expression has been around a long time, long before the song was made popular by Ms. Anderson. It implies that to promise a rose garden means to promise a life of ease and enjoyment. It strikes me that the person who originated this expression must never have had a rose garden of his own. Anyone who has ever slaved over roses, spraying and watering and fertilizing, knows that there are more thorns on a rose bush than there are blossoms. He knows that each beautiful, fragrant bloom comes only after a great deal of hard work and that its existence is relatively brief.

I believe I can promise you a rose garden in life and particularly in your education. But I am not promising ease and pleasure. Neither education nor life in general is like that. Like the rose blossom, most things worth having take time and hard work to attain. Thank goodness, there are blossoming times of success and enjoyment. But of necessity, there must be thorny times of hard work, sadness and even failure. A productive, meaningful life is a mixture of these two. The blossoms are worth the thorns.

Friedrich Nietzsche

I am a firm believer in the necessity of continued, lifelong growth—intellectual, professional, and personal. This necessity applies to no one more than a faculty member. A person who is active, growing, and excited about learning makes a far better teacher. As a part of the faculty development program at Oxford, a group of us met periodically throughout the year to discuss books chosen because of their intellectual impact. We read such books as Pascal's Pensees and Hegel's Philosophy of History. This spring the selection was Friedrich Nietzsche's Beyond Good and Evil. There have been few books which I have disagreed with so completely but which I nevertheless have found fascinating.

One of my trips to Clinton occurred the evening after one of our discussions and a particular section stuck in my thoughts. It finally dawned on me that in this passage, even though I don't believe he meant to do so, Nietzsche had given a description of an ideal teacher. He had written:

"The genius of the heart (the ideal teacher) . . . silences all that is loud and self-satisfied, teaching it to listen . . . smooths rough souls and lets them taste a new desire . . . (T)he genius of the heart . . . teaches the doltish and rash to hesitate and reach out more delicately . . . guesses the concealed and forgotten treasure . . . and is a divining rod for every grain that has long lain buried . . . (T)he genius of the heart (is one) from whose touch everyone walks away richer, not oppressed by alien goods, but richer in himself, newer to himself than before, broken open, blown at and sounded out by a thawing wind, perhaps more unsure, tenderer, more fragile, more broken, but full of hopes that as yet have no name, full of new will and currents, full of new dissatisfaction."

Ours is an ancient, noble and dangerous profession. The excellent professor is not simply one who is a potter who shapes students, but a gardener who sows the seeds of information and technique and carefully cultivates students to grow on their own. The excellent teacher displays a delicate balance between strict expectation and compassion. While always being a co-learner with her students, she is not reluctant to assert her position of authority and her superior understanding of her subject which come with advanced training and experience. After all, we did not win these academic robes in a Batman look-alike contest.

Although I shall miss those trips and the opportunity to be alone and think long thoughts, I am glad the transition period is over. I am glad to be here with you to share in new adventures in our mutual travels through the wonder, difficulties, excitement, ambiguities, opportunities, dilemmas, fun, thorns, and serendipity of our educational endeavors at PC.

Alumni Gazette

News of you and your classmates

1920-34

Malcolm R. Williamson '20 and Mrs. Williamson recently celebrated their 55th wedding anniversary with a son who is a professor at the University of California. After retiring in 1968 as stated clerk of Mecklenburg (N. C.) Presbytery, Williamson supplied pastorates in New Zealand and Australia for two years. He and wife Mary now spend the summer months in Waynesville, N. C., and the winter months with another son in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. He and another son traveled 10,000 miles in the Yukon, Northwest Territories, and Alaska last year and sailed the length of the Labrador coast this year.

Francis B. (Skimp) Mayes '24 now resides at the Presbyterian Home of South Carolina in Summerville. An ordained Presbyterian minister who earned his BD degree at Columbia Seminary, he served churches in Beaufort, Columbia, North Charleston and Winnsboro prior to his retirement and was moderator of the Synod of South Carolina in 1955.

Alexander F. (Tut) Fewell '29 continues to reside in Rock Hill, where he was self-employed as a real estate broker—owner of A. F. Fewell Real Estate—prior to his 1974 retirement. He also was a cotton merchant. He and his wife, the former Louise Peace, live at 852 Milton Avenue.

Neil P. Clinton '30 now lives in West Columbia, S. C. (700 Nandon Place) after many years as president of the Horry County National Bank in Loris, where he was an active Presbyterian Church elder and civic leader. He retired in 1979.

James G. Monroe of Latta, S. C., retired three years ago from his work as a self-employed accountant. He and his wife, the former Elizabeth Blakely '36, continue to live at 306 E. Bamberg Street. She also is retired from her position as a public school teacher.

Mrs. Alice Benjamin Jones '32, the only girl in her PC graduating class, now lives at 6200 Oregon Avenue NW, Box 473, Washington, D. C. Prior to her retirement in 1980, she had an active career that included 11 years with the Southern Railway System and five years as an English teacher at Belt Junior High School in Wheaton, Md. She has done post-graduate work at American University, George Washington University, the University of Maryland and San Jose State, and has held teaching certificates in South Carolina and California as well as in Maryland. She also has been active in Washington's National Presbyterian Church and in several civic organizations dealing with American history. Last year, she made a major gift to PC in memory of her late husband, Willard Jones '28, PC librarian of 1928-41 who later rose to lieutenant colonel as a career Army officer.

Furman B. Pinson, Jr. '33 and wife Julia earlier this year moved to New Orleans, where they now reside at 1750 St. Charles Avenue, Apt. 605. They had lived in Greensboro, N. C., for many years and throughout most of his long career with J. P. Stevens & Co. He retired from this textile organization in 1976 as vice president and director of purchasing. A Presbyterian elder and past president of the PC Alumni Association, he also served as a trustee here and was a past president of the Carolina-Virginia Purchasing Management Association.

Herman C. Quantz '34 is now back in Alexandria, La., where he engaged in medical practice for many years until his retirement in 1979. In addition to being a Presbyterian elder, he has held membership in the International

College of Surgery and the American Academy of Otolaryngology. Address: 363 Windermere Blvd., No. 320, Alexandria.

Mrs. Margaret Jones Syre '34 makes her home in Woodruff, Wisc. (Box 3). Prior to retirement, her husband had been a professor at the Lutheran School of Theology in Chicago.

1935-41

Alvin R. Ward '35 lives in Blackshear, Ga., where he has operated his own accounting firm as a certified public accountant. Address: 408 Church Street.

Mrs. Sarah Cannon Smith '36 of Spartanburg retired two years ago from her position as reference

Francis Blalock '38:

He takes office as Clinton mayor

The new mayor of Clinton is Francis Blalock '38, who succeeds David Tribble '77 in this position after the latter did not seek reelection.

Blalock was elected without opposition in city balloting last August and took office in September to head the municipal operations built around a city-manager form of government.

A native of Clinton and one of its leading businessmen, he retired in 1983 after many years as president and owner of Sunshine Cleaners & Laundry. Earlier, he spent four years in Army service during World War II—half of that time overseas.

Francis Blalock has been a leader in fund-raising programs for PC and a member of the alumni board of directors. He also is a Presbyterian elder and a director of the Security Federal Savings & Loan Association in Clinton. His wife is the former Eloise Von Hollen, and they have two sons.

librarian with the Spartanburg County Public Library. Holder of two library science degrees from Peabody College, she held earlier positions as director of the Anderson (S. C.) County Library and Abbeville High School librarian.

Odell A. (Pop) Matthews '37 continues to live in Columbus, N. C. (310 Peniel Road), where he is an active Presbyterian elder. He retired in 1979 as a pharmacist with the Veterans Administration associated with the Oteen Veterans Hospital. Earlier, he was the owner-manager of Matthews Drug Store in his native Bennettsville, S. C.

H. Baxter Carpenter '38 the effective underwriter with Prudential Insurance Co., has been with this company for almost 40 years. During this time, he has served as president of local and state associations of life underwriters and as president of the Western South Carolina Chapter of American Society of Charter Life Underwriters. He makes his home at 6 Trails End, Greenville.

W. Hunter Jones '39 continues to live at 20 Round Spinney Lane in his native Seneca, S. C., where he operated the Hunter Jones Agency until his retirement six years ago. His wife is the former Dorothy Louise King.

Thelma Taylor '40 of Williamston, S. C. (12 Poinsett) had a long and successful, 44-year teaching career in the South Carolina public schools prior to her retirement in 1984. She spent the last 33 years in Anderson County School District 1, where she was named "teacher of the year" in 1976. During her 28 years as advisor to the Palmetto High School yearbook, this publication received many All-American and All-State awards.

W. Lewis (Lew) Boggs '41 of Greenville, S. C., claims he is now semi-retired in his operation of the Boggs Lumber Sales Co. he has owned for many years. Nation's best high school record:

McKissick makes football history at Summerville

The nation's "winningest" high school football coach at one school.

That's the record achieved this year by alumnus John McKissick '51, who ended the 1986 season with 346 victories against just 62 losses and 13 ties during his 34 seasons at Summerville (S.C.) High.

Such production, obviously, has other dividends. His Green Wave team—playing in the fast Class AAAA, Division 1 (Big 16) competition—won another state championship this fall. It made the ninth state title for McKissick and his fourth in the last five years.

Numerous personal honors have accompanied the team honors. What might be considered his biggest award came in 1980 when he was named national "high school coach of the year" by the 40,000-member National High School Athletic Coaches Association.

John McKissick ran fullback, and also lettered in baseball and wrestling, during his student days at Presbyterian College. He earned his BA degree in economics in 1951, coached for one year at Clarkston, N. C., then in 1952 began his long reign as head coach and athletic director at Summerville High School. A native of Greenwood, he already had two years of World War II service with the 82nd Airborne Division under his belt before entering college.

What next on the McKissick gridiron? He plans to keep on winning, of course, and he hopes he has enough time to eclipse the biggest national coaching record of all. That one is the career record of 405 overall victories achieved by Gordon L. Wood at more than one Texas high school during 44 years of coaching. Right now, the 60-year-old McKissick is tied for second in this category with the late Pinky Babb of Greenwood—under whom he once played. At the 1986 Summerville pace of 13-1, he can reach the ultimate goal in less than five years.

Promotion for Greg Pearce '70:

Now director of S. C.'s largest mental hospital

The youngest head of South Carolina's largest mental hospital, L. Gregory Pearce, Jr. '70 this fall became director of Crafts-Farrow State Hospital in Columbia.

As the chief administrative officer of this geropsychiatric facility (patients age 55 and older), his major responsibility will be to implement the Department of Mental Health plan for reducing Crafts-Farrow patient beds from the present count of 785 to 300 by the end of fiscal year 1987-88. It means placing patients in state-wide intensive care facilities, skilled nursing care facilities and alternative living situations in the community.

"It is with a tremendous sense of excitement that I enter into this new position of service to the patients of Crafts-Farrow State Hospital," Pearce said after his promotion. "While I have been privileged to serve in a variety of positions with the Department of Mental Health during my 20-year tenure, my appointment as facility director by far represents the most challenging of my career. Working together with the employees of Crafts-Farrow and the administration of the Department we hope to enhance the overall quality of care for the patients in our charge and pledge our approach will be characterized by purposeful commitment, enthusiasm and a responsiveness to the programs..."

A Columbia native, Greg Pearce received his BS degree in psychology and special education at Presbyterian College in 1970. He then went to the University of South Carolina for his MA in counseling and for additional post-graduate study in clinical psychology. He was director of the S. C. State Hospital Developmental Disabilities Unit at the time of his recent appointment.

Among his student activities at PC, Pearce was sports editor of the newspaper, and he has remained close to the college over the years. He is married to the former Johnnie Chapman, and they have two children. Address: 1353 Sanford Dr., Columbia.

Gardner '85 at Anderson:

First Church staff built around PC people

With the addition of Deborah Gardner '85 to its staff last January, the First Presbyterian Church of Anderson, S. C., became even more PC oriented.

Debbie now functions as director of activities and youth work at the church—duties that include being in charge of the Family Life Center. She assumed this position soon after earning her BA degree here in May, 1985, with a double major in religion-Christian education and music.

The senior minister of First Church is Dr. B. E. Pettit, a 1959 Presbyterian College graduate who also serves as a member of the board of trustees. He went there in 1978 from the pulpit of Spartanburg's Westminster Presbyterian Church and has encouraged PC support throughout the area.

The church staff also benefits from the presence of Libby Harvey Wentzky '75 as director of Christian education for the congregation. She majored in this field at PC and moved into her present position after working with the Anderson County Department of Social Services.

Together, this trio forms a strong PC combination for Anderson First.

His survivors include his wife, parents, one son, a daughter and a sister.

His devoted service spanned 38 years

Perhaps no one loved Presbyterian College the way Marshall W. Brown did. And his death at 86 on December 17 removed a giant of an earlier era who gave his entire 38-year career to the nurture of this institution.

"It's like giving up a child," he said in 1963 upon his retirement as president. Certainly, the college had been like an offspring in the care required during hard years and in his faithful response in so many areas of service.

He was something of a Renaissance man in his breadth of interests and knowledge. This period of history seemed to fascinate him most during his years of classroom instruction as an individual committed to the academe. And yet, he had thrust upon him the pragmatic challenge of administration that he accepted gladly but with realization that it carried him away from his favorite work of teaching students.

Marshall Brown had the longest tenure of any president who has served the college in its 107-year history. He became PC's 13th chief executive in early-1945 and continued until his retirement in August, 1963—a total of 18½ years in office. This tenure followed the opening years as history professor and then 16 years in the dual capacity of teacher-dean.

Presbyterian College enjoyed a period of great progress in program, plant and personnel under Dr. Brown's leadership. He launched the school's first long-range development program, with projections extending 25 years into the future—and since completed. Total assets, endowment and church and alumni support all increased substantially. His administration saw three new buildings erected and funds secured for three more buildings added shortly after his retirement.

In each capacity from teacher to president, Marshall Brown was recognized by professional associates. He served as president of the South Carolina Historical Association in 1933-34. At a time when PC had less than 350 students, he was elected president of the Southern Conference of Academics for the 1937-38 school year. He later was elected president of the Presbyterian Education Association (1952), South Carolina Synod "man of the year" (1952), chairman of the S. C. Foundation of Independent Colleges (1960-62) and moderator of the Synod of South Carolina (1963).

Especially significant, he served by successive gubernatorial appointments as state representative to the pioneering Southern Regional Education Board from the time of its inception in 1948 until his 1963 retirement.

And immediately after retirement, he was appointed by Governor Donald S. Russell to be state coordinator of the new federal program entitled the Higher Education Facilities Act. In this capacity and over a period of several years, Marshall Brown was empowered with the distribution of millions of dollars to both private and public colleges that met the qualifications. And thus, in a nice twist of fate, he turned from being a "beggar" for PC to "Daddy Warbucks" for all of South Carolina higher education.

A native of Newbern, Tenn., Marshall Brown had some Army service during World War I, then earned his BA degree from Centre College. He spent a year of post-graduate study at the University of Vienna in Austria before acquiring his MA from the University of Wisconsin, and his later work toward a PhD at the University of Chicago had to be discontinued because of pressing administrative duties at PC. Honorary degrees came from Centre and Davidson College.

His first two years of teaching were at McCallie School of Chattanooga. Then in 1925, President Davison M. Douglas brought the young history scholar to Presbyterian College as part of the most ambitious development of faculty, program and plant undertaken here up to that time.

The secretary to the president of McCallie School then was Miss Lillian Gross of Chattanooga, whom Marshall

Brown added to the campus as his wife a year after his arrival here.

When the board of trustees created the office of dean in 1928, they chose PC's youngest faculty member for the position. Even as he filled the office well, Dean Brown continued to serve as the entire history department throughout the 16-year tenure of his deanship. He was one of the most popular teachers of that era. And Mrs. Brown worked closely with him in her capacity as registrar during this period.

In the desperate years of financial stress prior to World War II, President William P. Jacobs II (also textile leader and publisher) devoted strenuous energies to saving Presbyterian College. Dean Brown became his right arm as acting president during his frequent absences from the campus. It was good training for the years ahead.

When Dr. Jacobs resigned in February, 1945, to become president of the American Cotton Manufacturers Association, he recommended Marshall Brown as his successor.

A year later, after the war ended, PC launched the first of three major fund-raising campaigns of the Brown administration. Bailey Hall (1955), Douglas House (1958) and Belk Auditorium (1960) were erected during this time, and the record campaign of 1962 raised funds that added Clinton Hall, Greenville Hall and Richardson Hall of Science simultaneously soon after his retirement. His planning for full coeducation (which came in 1965) already had projected the Clinton Hall facility as PC's first women's dormitory. His determination to expand campus land resulted in the acquisition of 120 additional acres to bring the area to the 175-acres that ensured room for future growth.

PC began its real forward strides during that period of history . . . slowly and gradually but with a momentum that has accelerated over the ensuing years. Much of the campus and program stand today as a memorial to the vision of Marshall Walton Brown as dean and president. And hundreds of alumni have paid him tribute as an inspiring teacher who influenced their lives.

After his retirement, both he and Mrs. Brown maintained their continuing interest in and devotion to Presbyterian College—most recently expressed through their endowed M & L Scholarship Fund. She survives and requests that any memorials be directed there.

Almost a Rhodes Scholar:

Another grant takes him to Oxford, anyway

PC senior Michael Sheffield made it to the finals of the Rhodes Scholarship competition this month but had to settle for being considered one of the 96 most exemplary students in the nation.

He and a Harvard medical school student were the two South Carolina nominees who competed against 14 candidates from seven other Southern states. They were not among the four chosen to study at Oxford University.

Although Michael will not be going to Oxford as a Rhodes, he already has been chosen to attend that distinguished English university as the recipient of a coveted Rotary International Scholarship for next year. He plans to pursue biological research.

Michael Sheffield will receive both BA and BS degrees at Commencement next May with majors in English and biology. A straight-A student from Carrollton, Ga., he served as co-editor of the PaC SaC yearbook last year and now commands the ROTC battalion here. Last summer, he earned his wings with five jumps at Fort Benning's Airborne School.

He wrote in his scholarship application:

"Sometimes I think my forte and love is English—the language and the literature. However, by the time I finished my first year at Presbyterian College, I had been drawn to delve into the sciences in preparation for research in the biological sciences. I discovered what was common to both English and biology: the study of man, how he thinks and how he works. I hope to use all of my training as I try to understand all aspects of the people whom I'd like to help . . ."

"I sometimes feel as if I'm doing long-distance running while I'm finishing academic work for two degrees: the BA in English and the BS in biology. I've had runner's high all my college years."

Dr. Rachel W. Stewart, associate professor of English, wrote in her recommendation to the Rhodes committee:

"In my 17 years of college teaching at large universities and at this small excellent school, Presbyterian College, I have taught more than 2,000 students. Through my daughters who studied at Wellesley, Yale and Princeton, I have known many other college students. A number of these students have won such scholarships to study abroad as the Marshall and the Rhodes. Of all of these young people I've known, Michael Sheffield is the outstanding one."

Fine and decorative art that relates to the South is the specialty of Robert M. (Rob) Hicklin, Jr. '70, who acquires a growing reputation in this distinctive field.

The company bearing his name in Spartanburg counts as clients more than 50 museums and institutions and 20 corporate collections throughout the South—in addition to numerous individuals attracted to his gallery. He has lectured at the Natchez Antiques Forum and the Garden Clubs of Virginia in annual session... exhibited in Houston and Charlotte... and published widely accepted catalogs dealing with Southern art and artists.

His Hattie Saussy, Georgia Painter, for example, was judged the best catalog of its type by the Printing Industry of America in 1983. And he has produced eight other catalogs devoted to paintings, prints and various other aspects of his specialty. Last year, Rob published The South on Paper: Line, Color and Light, a catalog of an exhibition of Southern works on paper presented by Robert M. Hicklin, Jr., Inc. And the latest production, off the press this year, deals with black art from the South.

The PC alumnus, in business since 1972, made the newspaper feature columns last summer when he purchased an Audubon collection for $450,000. Staff writer Charles A. Twardy wrote about it for The Columbia State in these words:

A rare find for a Spartanburg art dealer has translated into a good deal for the Charleston Library Society.

Robert M. Hicklin, Jr., who operates a gallery under his name in Spartanburg, recently purchased one of the few remaining complete sets of John James Audubon's "The Birds of America" from the Charleston Library Society for $450,000.

Although the purchase price pales next to the about

Dealer in Southern art:

Rob Hicklin buys rare Audubon work for $450,000

$4.5 million paid in 1979 by Arthur Magill of Greenville for the Andrew Wyeth collection, Hicklin considers his acquisition quite a coup.

"This is an exceptionally rare piece of Americana," the art dealer remarked in a phone interview.

"One might say it is obviously an important transaction involving fine art, as was the Magill purchase of the Wyeth collection."

Hicklin estimated that 64 complete Audubon sets exist, and said that one other set is known to be on the market.

"Sixty-four of anything does not make it rare," he noted, "but most of those are in institutions, where they will never cut them loose."

The set contains 435 hand-water-colored engravings executed between 1827 and 1838. They were originally sold in groups of five to about 196 individual subscribers. Subscribers generally had their sets bound when complete. Hicklin said there may have been as many as 150 different binders of Audubon sets.

Hicklin is having his set unbound and will sell the prints individually.

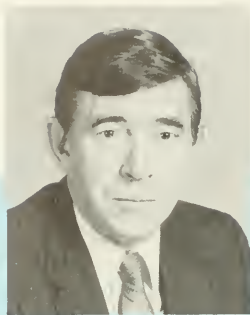

"Frankly, I had hoped to sell it as a set," he said. "I would like to see something like that kept together." Hicklin said he has already sold several prints. Prices will vary between $2,500 and $45,000, depending on the beauty and allure of the particular print.

Hicklin emphasized that the set came from an original subscriber, and has not changed owners. The Charleston Library Society contracted with Audubon for the set in 1832, paying $1,000 for it, according to Hicklin. The set was stolen in 1977, but was recovered.

Hicklin purchased an Audubon set several years ago from Groton School in Groton, Mass. He said it took him about three years to sell all the prints from that set. Also, he bought an Audubon copper plate in 1984, depicting a Carolina Rail, that he sold to Northwestern University. "The copper plates are very rare," he said.

Hicklin said that about one Audubon set a year has come on the market and sold since 1980, and consequently, the number of available sets has dwindled to nearly zero. Among the institutional owners of Audubon sets are the University of South Carolina, Duke University and the New York Public Library. Private collectors own fewer than a half dozen sets.

Douglas Kiker '52:

He sets murder mystery at Cape Cod

In its recent "selection of innovative chillers and thrillers," TIME magazine included these words as part of its Book Review section:

"NBC Newsman Douglas Kiker uses Cape Cod in winter as the setting for Murder on Clam Pond (Random House; 228 pages; $15.95), in which a broken-down former newspaper reporter finds a new hometown, renewed professional vigor and the love of a much younger woman, all through probing the murder of his next-door neighbor. What lifts the book above the ordinary is a detailed and subtle portrait of the dark side of charity: the victim is the richest woman in town, and the chief suspects are a group of bright young adults whom she singled out for her largesse."

And the Atlanta Journal-Constitution concluded its positive review in these words:

"Author Douglas Kiker draws the reader in slowly at first, then faster as the pace quickens. He adds suspense well . . . He has written an entertaining murder mystery, with a hero you'll want to see again."

And the 1952 Presbyterian College graduate already plans for you to see the hero again. He has almost completed his second mystery in what could develop into a series—scheduled for publication next fall.

Douglas Kiker has two earlier novels to his credit. Within a few years after finishing PC, he turned out The Southerner (based on a Southern integration crisis) and followed that book with Strangers on the Shore (about the peacetime Navy). Both were well-received by the reading public.

He is now in his 20th year as one of the veteran news correspondents of the National Broadcasting Company. During this time, he has served as foreign correspondent, war correspondent, White House reporter and political correspondent in presidential elections—work that has included the Peabody Award for broadcasting excellence. He continues to be seen regularly in feature assignments on NBC's evening television news. And whenever possible, he likes to spend time at his Cape Cod second home, where sailing is a favorite hobby.

Douglas Kiker returned to PC last May to deliver the Commencement address—one of the numerous times he has appeared here as a popular speaker.
